Grief is a natural work to a loss. When lose something, we feel unhappy and sad. We feel emotional about what we lost. The more important the loss more will be our sense of sadness. It is not just loss or death of a loved one that causes grief. It may be many other things, such as, Relationship issues are broken relationship, diverse failed marriage. Health issues are loss of health, sickness, failure serious illness or disability. Financial issues are loss of property loss of job, failure in business, debts. Losses of roles are loss of status, retirement losing a position in an organization, Safety issues are after a trauma, feeling loss of security. Tender issues are loss of a valued article, heirloom, keepsake, pets, family home. Most significant of all loss of loved one spouse, children parents friends.

One cannot say which loss is greater than the other. For some, moving away from family home to a new to a new place may cause sadness. For some death of a pet can bring unhappiness. Grieving is a highly individual experience. It will take some time to heal and there is nothing like a normal timetable to stop grieving. Grief is not limited to sadness. Sometimes it is mixed with anger. For example, a child may be angry that the parent died and made him or her orphan. There may be guilt, for example, a spouse may feel guilty that he or she did not take proper care of the spouse when alive. Sometimes people may switch between feeling relief and feeling sad. For example, when a sick person who had been suffering for a long time dies, one may feel that it was for the best that the person escaped misery. At the same time there may be sadness and guilt.

Emotional signs in a Grieving person. Shock and disbelief is the immediately after a loss, a person may find it hard to accept reality. One may even deny the truth. If a loved one has died, one may keep expecting the person to show up. Sadness is the usual and universally experienced symptom of grief. Feeling of emptiness, despair, loneliness and uncontrolled crying are often seen after loss. When a loved one dies, one may regret what they said did or did not say or do, some feel they have failed as they could not prevent the death of a loved one. Did we do enough that is a question that may bother some even though nothing could have been done. Anger many feel angry with God, with Doctors and with themselves after losing a loved one. Sometimes, they feel anger toward the dead person for abandoning them and feel a sense of injustice. Fear, loss sometimes triggers worries and fears. People feel anxious and insecure. When loved one dies, people may panic as to how to face life alone or fear that it may be their turn next to die. A physical symptom in a Grieving Person is not uncommon to experience fatigue, nausea, sleeplessness after a loss, immunity may get lowered and powers often lose weight.

Physicians have found that after a major loss such as death of a spouse or child, up to a third of people will suffer physical and mental problems. Bereavement increases the risk of death from heart, disease and suicide.

Above twenty five percentage of widows and widowers experience depression. After a traumatic loss, there is an urge to look back, search for what is lost. There is also an urge to look ahead, and move on socio cultural factors influence how urges are expressed or inhibited.
